From the Story to Us

You can look at the illustrations together, notice the children's actions and facial expressions, and ask: How do they feel? When are they having fun? Are they angry? In your opinion, why does the girl want to be "more"? How do you feel when someone tells you "I'm more"?

Dramatizing “More”

You can dramatize the story together: Follow the gestures in the illustrations, switch roles, and add your own sentences. One of you can say, for instance: “I love reading books with you”, and the other can respond: “I love it more!”

Looking for More

Enrich your vocabulary with various adjectives while playing an amusing and challenging game around the house: Pick an item you have at home. Ask – “which is bigger/smaller/more transparent/more colorful...” and so on, depending on the description of your choice. The other player will now look for an identical item that is “more”, such as a larger ball or softer pillow.

In our Own Words

Books containing few words present readers with an opportunity! After reading the story for the first time, ask your child to tell the story in his/her own words using the illustrations. The way a child tells a story provides a glimpse into his/her inner world.
