Family Reading Advice

From the Child's Perspective

After you have read this book several times, you can ask your child to read it him/herself with the help of the illustrations. Reading, books that touch on emotional issues from daily life, enable children to express feelings and emotions from their inner worlds, while allowing you to discover how they have experienced the story. What did they choose to emphasize? Which details did they add?

Discussion — Two Sisters, Two Perspectives

You can discuss the two sisters' feelings, and discover their two different perspectives – How did the older cat feel when her new sister was brought home? Why did the younger kitten take all the toys? Would you prefer to be a big brother and sister or a little brother and sister?

A Family of Copycats

The young kitten copies everything her older sister does. You can also play a fun copycat game – take turns being the older cat and making a certain movement that the other players will then try to copy.

Come Find Me!

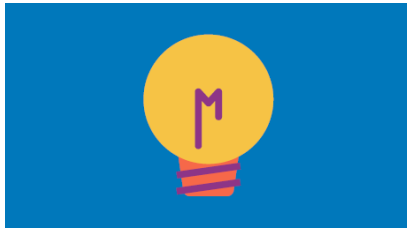

When the older cat hides, she always leaves some "clue" behind – one part of her body is left showing so that she can be found. You too can play a hide-and-go-seek game where the person hiding leaves a small clue, like a hand poking out under the table. When you find each other, you can give a hug and exchange some positive words of love!
