Nostalgic Memories

If you look at the illustrations in this book closely, you will be able to find a range of special items, such as a rotary dial telephone, gramophone, and cuckoo clock. This is an opportunity to share stories and memories: Which of these items do your children recognize? And which of them did you have at home, growing up? Are there any nostalgic meaningful items that you or your children are keeping as souvenirs?

Items that Need Someone New

You can go together to the nearest thrift store, walk among the items on display, and see whether you also feel like you are in a 'treasure cave'. Perhaps you also have some items that would like to have someone new? You can set up a home-based thrift store, and have family members and neighbors 'buying' and 'selling'.

Giving Away Nostalgic Prizes

Imagine an honorary prize for your father for coming up with a funny travel game, or maybe for your grandmother for baking you that surprise birthday cake? You can be inspired by this book to make honorary certificates documenting little moments that carry great meaning. This way, your personal memories will become a bonding family discussion.

The Game of "Dreaming of Being"

Grandpa dreamed of being a singer. What do you dream of being? Each of your family members can mime something they dream of being, and have the other players guess what it is.
