Family Reading Advice

Toddlers engage with books in different ways: by touching them, opening and closing them, playing and looking at illustrations. Some will want to listen to the entire book, while others will prefer to start from a single page, and get used to reading at their own pace. You can read a little each day, and slowly but surely, books will turn into friends!

Discussion — My laughter and I

You can discuss laughter in your toddlers' lives with them – When do we laugh? When are we are happy or sad? What makes you laugh and smile? Is there anyone who makes you laugh more than others?

Looking for laughter

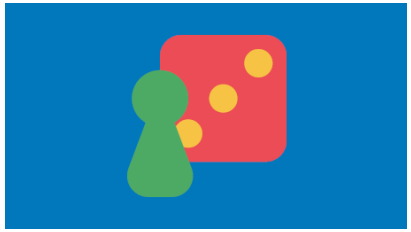

Look for the situations that make you laugh together – you can try face-pulling games to discover the funniest face you can make; or gently tickle various body parts – using your fingers or a feather – such as arms or legs, to find out whether laughter is hiding there and whether tickling helps it come out of hiding

What is hiding in the illustrations?

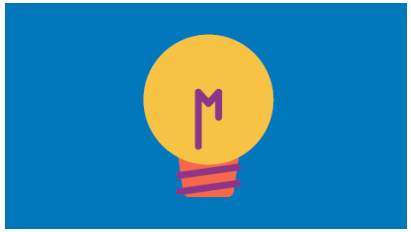

Can you find the cat on every page? Have you ever seen a head emerge from a teapot? Can you notice any other amusing details in the illustrations? Which materials and objects are the illustrations made of? You can look closely and discover new amusing details every time you read this book.
