The Family Ship

You can look at the illustrations together, ask and share: Is anything other than the rope tying the sailors to one another? Just like on the ship – what connects members of our household to one another? How do you view the role played by each member? How can each of them contribute to the family “ship”?

An Illustration in Gestures

A funny chef arranging strawberries on a cake, or a fisherman trying to walk with his leg stuck in a bucket – the illustrations in this book are full of interesting details. You can select one amusing illustration at a time, describe it in your own words, and try to convey what it portrays using gestures.

We Are all One Ship

Stand in a row holding hands with some friends or family members. Now try to walk a pre-determined course, such as from the living room to the bedroom. You can add some “waves” – meaning obstacles that you need to climb over or crawl under without letting go of each other’s hands. What will happen if someone let’s go? Will the “ship” be able to sail?

Experiment

You can give a demonstration of a “hole in the ship” using a bucket full of water and a cardboard cup or bowl. Your bucket will be the great big sea, while your cup or bowl will be the ship – sail your ship and watch it float on the water. What will happen if you make a hole at the bottom of it? Try it and find out!
