Family Reading Advice

The encounter with different illustration styles develops toddlers' sensitivity to color and aesthetics, as well as their attention to detail. The illustrations in this book have been placed into boxes, much like a comic book. While reading, you can help your toddlers follow the plot by pointing at the right box, and asking questions about the details that appear in it.

Sharing House Chores

You can discuss with your toddlers and ask: Do they help around the house? How? What other chores would they like to take part in? How do they feel when they do things around the house themselves? Are some things too hard? You can talk about your own experiences – the kinds of things you learned to do when you were their age.

Fun Tasks

You should think of a house chore that your toddlers can take part in and turn it into an experiential game. For example: Taking all the socks that have just been washed and dried, pulling one over your hand, and having it help you look for its mate; or turning vegetable-rinsing into a vegetable “shower” under the faucet, or a “bath” in a bowl.

Egg-Ball

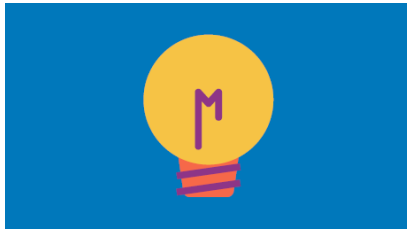

Suggest that your toddlers experiment the various ways that Yehoshua attempted to bring the egg by using a ball – throwing and catching it, placing it on your head, holding it and running... You can also try different-sized balls, or soft or hard ones, while noticing what each one feels like.
