קְרִיאָה

Family Reading Advice

Books written from the protagonist's point of view invite us to take a closer look at the way others experience the world.
A glimpse into the world of others can make us identify with their feelings and emotions, discover that there are others who experience things the way we do, and cultivate empathy as well as sensitivity toward others.

Communication Beyond Words

What would you have said to Nino had you met her during her first few days in Israel? How would you have spoken to her? How would you have cheered her up? Have you ever encountered difficulties communicating with someone? Have you ever felt that no one understands you? What other ways are there to communicate when words are not enough?

What Can We Wee Outside Our Window?

What is the view from your window? How would you describe it to a friend who lives in another country? You can look out your window at home and describe what you see in words, movement or art.

A Song in Another Language

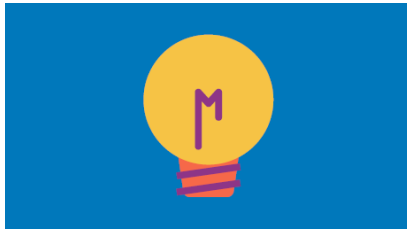

Try listening to a children's song in another language together. You can move to the rhythm of the music, guess what the song is about, or make up your own lyrics.
