One "Language" at Home — Another in Kindergarten

This book exposes children to an exciting period in history, and invites a discussion of their feelings in day-to-day situations. You can discuss with your children and ask: Why was Milka concerned and indecisive on the night before Baron de Rothschild's visit? What do you think of the choice she made? Are there rules in kindergarten that differ from the ones you have at home too? Which ones?

How Do We Say it in Hebrew?

to the page containing the words that Mr. Yudilovitz, the teacher, sent to his friend, and try to pronounce them, or even use them in a sentence: “Can you pass me the Handtuch, please?” How about thinking together about all the non-Hebrew words we use in our daily lives and what their Hebrew alternatives are? You can try to invent new Hebrew words together too.

Looking for the Donkey

Have you noticed the grey donkey that appears in almost every illustration? The illustrations in this book are full of details, color, and text. You can pause on each page, look at the illustrations, and discover the things that interest you, while searching for the little donkey that accompanies this entire story.
